desired to myself and three of my nearest friends facing the charge of being accessory to the murder of William Rosenthal.

I don't know how it is all going to end, but if I ever witness my first trial, I will be sure to go to the top of the tree.

With gambling I am through. I have never more starting on the road. I have never more starting on the road. I have never more starting on the road.

As I found out I started to the top of the tree. I started to the top of the tree. I started to the top of the tree.

I added to this another chip in Bridgeport, and one in Waterville. I also acquired a valuable franchise in the Connecticut State League.

All these ventures brought me in about $100,000. I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

Poker in Connecticut.

My gambling in Connecticut was confined to twenty card games, as the State of Connecticut does not permit any public gambling houses.

My business as a gambler and manager of the athletic club called for frequent trips to the State of Connecticut. I attended to the business of the club, and I attended to the business of the club.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

His Reputation.

I had a reputation as a gambler. I had a reputation as a gambler. I had a reputation as a gambler.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

On my return to Connecticut after my trip to New York, I had had lost the attraction for me. I began making visits to my associates to get down to New York again. The gambling fever was on me, and life in Connecticut was getting shabby.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

Walks Out Prisonless.

I remember one day when I owed my partners personally considerable money and when the day after an unusually successful session at one of our clubs we were settling up. I asked them if they would wait for me by letting me have my short list of bills paid up. I told them to wait for me by letting me have my short list of bills paid up.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

Starts Hunt for Money.

I was all in a day, as my affairs were coming to a crisis. I could not go on much longer with my friends in Connecticut, would soon begin to suspect the truth.

I walked out into the street and I walked out into the street.

immediately began thinking when I could get more money to play the "house" with.

I would have said I went to the top of the tree. I went to the top of the tree. I went to the top of the tree.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

Couldn't Face Creditors.

I walked out on the street like a drunk man. I walked out on the street like a drunk man. I walked out on the street like a drunk man.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

Becomes Gambler's Associate.

I then became the associate of gamblers, and I became the associate of gamblers. I became the associate of gamblers.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

At this time an informant named Rosenthal, who was a gambler, and I became the associate of gamblers. I became the associate of gamblers.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

Was Rosenthal Chum.

I then drifted back down and became indifferent to everything and everything but gambling. More of my time was spent in the company of gamblers.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

"I Don't Like That Shape"

THAT is the comment often made by men who haven't learned the advantages of the Londres shape. Think a minute: The Londres gives you 15% to 20% more smoke than a torpedo-shaped cigar of the same length. Furthermore, you get the full smoke from the first touch of the match. Also, there is no squeezing of the filler at the end to choke the draught and cause irregular and imperfect burning.

Blames Greed of Police.

Schepps gave the blame for the downfall of the network of craft in New York to two things. But blame, he says, centers most on the greed of the men who furnished protection.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

Rosenthal Lost Fortunes.

He represented the opposite type. Rosenthal made fortune in New York, and he decided that he would not give up anything. He was fighting all the time and he would never let the matter square.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

Fortunes Made in Short Time.

Schepps was asked if the gamblers working under protection of the police operated openly. He smiled.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

I was in the money. I was in the money. I was in the money.

GET IN WITH RED SOX ARE SERIES CONTEST

With a record of ten games won, five lost and one tied, the Red Sox return home today after their Western trip. They won away in a slump, having slacked their play, and it was feared that they might lose their commanding lead in the American League race.

The slump reached its crisis when they split with the Browns at St. Louis, since then they have "come back" with a vengeance, and since Washington suffered even worse than the Sox did at St. Louis, the Red Sox have been a half game better off over its nearest competitor than it was when it went away.

When the Red Sox went West they left Washington by seven games. They returned today seven and a half games ahead of the Senators. Still, however, believe that the team has passed the crisis in its campaign, that it is playing better than ever, and that, barring accident, the team will begin to pull away from all of their competitors.

The Red Sox, accompanied by Tris Speaker's mother, who joined the team at Cleveland, arrive at 3 o'clock this afternoon. They will have a good rest before beginning their last long home campaign. They will not play until Wednesday, when they battle a four-game series with the Browns, in a double-header.

SEE RED SOX IN ACTION FREE

The Red Sox will arrive home again today after a hard campaign through the West. Their expected slump never came, and just now issues never looked brighter for a pennant in Boston for the first time since 1904.

Wednesday they open up at home in a double-header with St. Louis. The AMERICAN ASSOCIATION is giving every baseball fan of New England an equal opportunity to see the Red Sox play.

Watch the sport pages of the AMERICAN for the one hundred numbers—free in the early editions and fifty in the late editions—which are printed each day. You may find a winning coupon, and don't forget its value.

It entitles the holder to a free grandstand seat at the Fenway Park. All you have to do is either bring or mail the coupon to the AMERICAN Promotion Department, No. 5 Washington square, and you will receive a grandstand ticket.

AD AND FAUCET MATCHED.
CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Ad Wagon and Faucet matched in a 10-minute boxing bout at the Garden Athletic Club in New York city, the first of a series of three bouts. The bout was won by Ad Wagon, who won by a unanimous decision.

For that reason the Pilgrims leader will have this Porch and Tied warm up to face the game. The struggle that shows the best will have the call to go on the mound from a representative of that club now at Fenway Park.

Manager Frank Chance is confident that his men will make a good sweep, even though the Pilgrims have made them go the limit in the two games played. The team will have tomorrow on the first line and believe he is just the one to put it on the Pilgrims.

A New Idea in Mannish Attire for the Fair Sex

AS Beatrice Mims set to be predestinate in her reply to his proposal, she was glad to take advantage of his suggestion and think long and almost joyously over the matter. His letter was delayed, and she had time to consider the matter, and she was glad to find that the man of whom she had thought as her probable husband regarded her only as a friend. After all, she consoled herself, no artist would ever be a good husband. She had heard much lately of the vagaries of the artistic temperament, and perhaps she should congratulate herself that she had escaped any closer relationship with it. The knowledge that a well-to-do and successful man had been so much interested in the matter was a new relief. She thought of the matter now with a little different feeling.

She has need of philosophy before the end of the day, for she received a letter from Robert Maynard that made her cheeks burn and brought tears of resentment to her eyes. Those, however, she laughed away quickly when her glance rested again on the envelope containing Bianchard's request for her hand. Maynard's letter began with an apology for intruding upon her time and went on to tell her that his reason for writing was to ask her congratulations upon his engagement to Miss Damerel.

"She tells me she has not got one ounce of talent," he wrote. "I hardly dare let her know that I am not one of those who run away with my pen, and you condemn me as a man whose head, as well as his heart, is incurably affected. For nobody can be so sure of his own powers as I am, even though I am aware that all my friends consider me the luckiest of men. Remembering that you and I were very much alike in our early days, I can hardly believe anything came between us. I like to think still of you as one who will rejoice in my happiness. Perhaps I would have been more sure of this if I had known this great good fortune of mine had not learned from your too little son of your matrimonial plans. May they prosper and may you be happy. I am sure that you and I are in the same boat—or, at least, in similar boats that to be launched again in matrimonial waters—I might not have been so sure of. I am sure that you will change of demeanor toward me. But as misery loves company, so happiness seeks sympathy from others who are "Poor little Miss Demorell!" sighed Beatrice. "How often it happens that a young girl, foolish and inexperienced, marries a man who knows and cares for the baser things of the world: it is too bad! Were she older and wiser she would not let herself fall in love with a man who drinks or think of marrying Robert Maynard if she knew of his intemperate habits."

Thus far she went in her self-deception, but then checked herself and had the grace to smile inwardly at her reasoning. For had she not thought seriously only a little while ago of accepting Maynard? Surely she could not plead youth and inexperience

"No—but I was lonely," she argued, "and I had been in seclusion for so long that I fell an easy prey to the attractions of an unscrupulous man."

Her honesty with herself did not move her to inquire in what way she had been Maynard's prey, nor whether, after all, he was a bit more unscrupulous than she was. Instead of going into self-analysis, she reread the letter and thought that she detected a covert sneer in its tone. Was Maynard making fun of her and her frustrated plans? She seized pen and paper hurriedly and wrote:

"Dear Mr. Maynard—Allow me to congratulate you most warmly on your engagement to a very sweet little girl. It is not often that a man of your age secure such a young wife to teach him to renew his youth, and to make him forget his sorrows and associations. How tender such memories have heretofore been to you. I know well, for you have so often talked to me of your dead wife, and, I deeply did I sympathize with you, that it came as a surprise to me when I learned that you had so soon forgotten her. I did not occur to me that you could bring yourself to marry again, but I am sure that you will do your utmost to protect and cherish the little girl who has chosen you as the object of her innocent love.

"I laughed aloud when I read reference to my small son's matrimonial schemes for me. I know, of course, that you are jesting, and that no sane or sober man would pay any serious attention to the prattle of a mere baby. I suppose my small boy heard me say that I expected Mr. Randolph, the artist, to come one evening, and in his childish imagination began to build castles in Spain about him and myself. Jack told me that he had confided his schemes to you, and that you had questioned him about them. Naturally, I knew that you did so just to humor the silly youngster.

"As 'twas long marring again—perhaps ought to think of it. But one who has nature like mine, and a never-ending desire of her married life, hesitates long to give herself to the pole of matrimony where she can find no husband. Were I ever to get to this point I hope I should not defy common sense and my chances of happiness by accepting any man until I had known him longer than I have known such a casual acquaintance as Mr. Randolph—who, by the way, will be here to-morrow night. Possibly he and I may never meet again."

"There!" exclaimed the widow as she glanced over her reflection. "I flatter myself that is pretty good. I think there is a 'dix' in there that will make Robert Ma-

There was still another letter which she decided to write that night. It was to Henry Blanchard. In it she told him truthfully that his note had been a decided surprise to her. She had not imagined, she insisted, that he cared so dearly for her. She thanked him for the honor he had conferred upon her, and also for allowing her to take time for thought and meditation before replying to his question. This, she said, she would like to do.

"You see," she wrote, "I am not one of the women who have regarded each man as a possible suitor. Therefore I must have leisure in which to ponder the subject you mention, for I do not want to do anything rashly, nor to make a promise that might not mean happiness for you."

Then she stopped and considered. She feared that her reply was too cool, too calculating, and that in reading it the recipient might fancy that she cared nothing for him. She hesitated for a moment, and then she wrote, "I have very much to say to you, and I have written it very much as I would speak it. I have added a paragraph which she tried to make a little tender and a little coy."

"You see," she wrote, "that I am trying conscientiously to judge of this question from the standpoint of the man, and to write it right for him and to what I may allow myself to do. I am not yet consulting personal desires or preferences, for fear that my feelings might, if I considered them, tempt me to make a hasty decision. And I am not yet consulting my own feelings, for I am not yet acquainted with you."

She smiled as she sealed the envelope with the words, "To Mr. A. B. C."

"That epithet, also, is quite clever," he muttered. Then she called Mary to "run out to the corner and mail a couple of letters for me." Mary, who had been closed behind the girl, the widow breathed a satisfactory sigh. She was finding her

There seems to be no limit to the ingenuity of inventors. The latest novelty is what a Paris contemporary terms "un berceur électrique." The berceur is designed to balance, and this is connected with a phonograph. As soon as the baby cries vibrating tablets of the apparatus are set in motion, and these in turn affect the phonograph, which emits a jumble of sounds. The cylinder causes the cradle to rock, and this pacifies the baby. As soon as the baby's cries cease the cradle no longer rocks. My child means the domestic occupations of the mother are not interrupted to look after the infant.

A contractor with a head for figures and building estimates has worked out that the Cheops Pyramid, in Egypt, could not be duplicated for less than $100,000,000. With modern machinery and the employment of 40,000 stonecutters, masons, quarrymen, masons, and laborers, a duplicate of the pyramid could be erected in two years. It has been calculated that the work really required the services of 100,000 men for thirty years. The Cheops Pyramid occupies a space of twelve and three-quarters acres, and is 740 feet high.

A Wonderful Mound of Earth Built by Tiny Insects

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"GEE, wish I could go on a vacation," said the Manicure Lady. "Everybody else is out in the country, and I don't see why I shouldn't be as lucky as a lot of other folks. Goodness knows I work hard enough. I was just telling sister Mayme and brother Wilfred last night that I was longing for a chance to get out into the country, among green fields and dales that the poets are all the time writing about. Neuther Wilfred or of sympathized with me at that, because he whispered to me that as soon as his gang pulls off a good trick he will have a few yellowbacks so he can pay back what he owes me and give me a chance for a regular vacation. He belongs to a gang, you know, George."

"No, I don't know," said the Head Barber, "and I don't want to know. Even if you see 'John the Barber' got tangled up in this case I have felt that it is my duty to be a barber to lay off and say nothing. I don't like gang men, but I don't dislike them, either, and you can take that from me. 'John the Barber' ain't got much on me when it comes to a wife and family and my map is uncluttered."

"What I was saying was that I wished I could go on a regular vacation, out into the country, where the green grass is and the little trout is swimming idly in crystal brooks. Did you ever stop to think, George, how soft it is for a trout?"

"I have never gave the subject much thought," admitted the Head Barber, "but I never even seen a trout except in the fish market or in the aquarium, so I don't know much about whether things is soft or hard for them. Why?"

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS: FINANCIAL NEWS

Markets Stronger And Stocks Are In More Demand

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, Aug. 12.—Midday: The Boston market opened firm and with a fair amount of trading. By the end of the first hour the latter had moderated and copper shares were selling higher. The price of the metal in the London market increased substantially at the opening.

Mayflower and Old Colony were particularly the latter. A dispatch from the Lake, the Boston Financial News states, says that Mayflower No. 20 drilled west through 40 feet of copper, which is reported to be the most showing yet made.

Among other copper to advance during the morning were North Boston, Superior, Amalgamated, Lake Superior and Calumet and Hecla. Butte Superior, however, receded.

The New York grew stronger, with copper showing well. American Smelting made a notable gain during the morning, shares were there during the first hour reached about 17.00.

N. Y. Market Opens Strong.

The New York market was active and strong when trading began, and most of the issues which figured in transactions made a gain, big or little, within the first fifteen minutes.

Fast figures for Northern Pacific reflected improved business conditions in the Northwest. Its gross earnings increased $454,186 in total over $300,132 and its net income $17,071. For the fiscal year, gross earnings had decreased $1,840,885, and net income $1,450,750.

Among the initial advances were common N. A. S. P., Northern P., Union Pacific, N. Y. C. & H. R., Canadian Pacific, N. Y. C. & H. R., and Southern Pacific.

The declines were inconspicuous. The market was characterized by activity at the outset, but at the end of fifteen minutes trading became a little slower.

The Curb was strong. American in London made gains over N. Y. curb, and reflected a confident view.

Copper Up in London.

The London copper warrants market started the week with spot up 16d, and futures 18s, 6d, higher.

Taft's Second Tariff Hari-Kari
on the Wool Bill

President Taft has vetoed the Wool bill presented to him by a sweeping majority from both houses of the Sixty-second Congress.

For the second time within a year the tactless Republican Executive has flouted public opinion and the public interest by standing obstructive in the pathway of tariff revision downward on one of the great commodities of life.

The President's whole attitude, culminating in this veto of the careful revision of the iniquitous Schedule K, has been full of inconsistency and error.

On August 18 of the year behind us the President, clearly stating that the present duties on wool and woollen goods were in many instances prohibitive, and in most cases too high, sent to Congress, nevertheless, his veto of the first Woollen bill passed overwhelmingly by the Sixty-second Congress. In the message transmitting that veto Mr. Taft based his veto upon the ground that no tariff bill should be prepared or passed without waiting to hear the report of the supposed expert Tariff Board which Congress had authorized him to appoint. These were the President's words:

I have reviewed the movement for the establishment of a tariff commission or board in order to show that the real advance and reform in tariff making are to be found in the acquiring of accurate and impartial information as to the effect of the proposed tariff changes under each schedule before they are adopted, and, further, to show that if delay in the passage of a bill to amend Schedule K can be had until December, Congress will then be in possession of a full and satisfactory report upon the whole schedule.

So the President vetoed the Wool bill on August 18, 1911. The country protested and the people were indignant, but the President was determined to wait for his Tariff Board.

Since that veto the Tariff Board has submitted two reports, one in December and one in March, giving all the information and advice that it could be expected to give, and in nearly all cases reports "THE MAJORITY OF RATES OF DUTY ON WOOL AND WOOLLEN GOODS AS PROHIBITIVE, AND CONDEMNED THE SYSTEM OF LEVYING THEM." It made plain that the President's veto GAVE THE MANUFACTURERS TWELVE MONTHS' GRACE TO OPERATE UNDER THIS UNJUST LAW. It recommends no rates and pleads its "INABILITY TO MAKE RATES OR SCHEDULES."

Now then: With this much vaunted and long expected report of Taft's Tariff Board fully in hand, and with the experience of a long consideration and debate behind them, the Senate and the House of Representatives prepare and send to the President a thoroughly moderate and judicious bill revising Schedule K.

AND TAFT VETOS IT!

More life for the probability rates and to the rates excessively high.

More grace for the manufacturers operating under these rates! Only let there be life and length of days to the Republican doctrine of protection.

Only let the partisan loyalty to a faction and a shibboleth survive, and it makes no difference whether the people suffer from exorbitant schedules or whether the bloated manufacturers riot in excessive profits.

It is doubtful if our annals have illustrated a blinder expression of partisan stupidity.

President Taft learns nothing by his mistakes. He is taught nothing by his own teachers or by the progressive spirit of the times. He is not only a reactionary, but a violent reactionary. He is not only a Bourbon, but a blind and stupid Bourbon, as well.

It is absolutely indispensable to the preservation of our prosperity and the establishment of justice that such a President and such a party should be retired.

Woodrow Wilson, in his speech of acceptance, aptly epitomizes the Taft spirit in this graphic paragraph:
The tariff question, as dealt with in our time at any rate, has not been business. It has been politics. Tariff schedules have been made up for the purpose of keeping as large a number as possible of the rich and influential manufacturers of the country in a good humor with the Republican party, which desires their constant financial support.

If President Taft had not already committed hari-kari a dozen times, this latest veto might well be described as political suicide.

BAD BOYS AND THE NAVY
U. S. R. Illinois, Navy Yard,
Bryant, Mass., July 21, 1912.

Dear Sir—The papers recently recounted some proceedings at the Naval College, Annapolis, Md., as having ordered a boy with a bad record to either leave the State or join the navy.
It cannot be stated too strongly that the navy is not a school and as a school for those with criminal tendencies and that the majority of the enlisted men in the navy are intelligent, earnest, honest, ambitious young men, representative in every way of the best American manhood. Because of this fact our navy is the first rank of the navy of the world in point of efficiency and integrity. Naturally, criminals upon the navy by well meaning boys and officers of the navy. Boys with criminal tendencies in civil life will exhibit those same tendencies in the navy and are detrimental to the efficiency of the service and the welfare of the men. Under such conditions do not just long in the navy because the motto is to be high in the navy to make it unpleasant for them. They have all devotions and had confined sailors are confined to the "bad boys" who have been found in the navy by the military police or civil officials.

The navy is the protector of the country, as the police are the protectors of the city and the navy is the police of the sea. To place adult criminals on the police force and that the majority of the enlisted men in the navy are intelligent, earnest, honest, ambitious young men, representative in Midland, United States Navy.

Desperate Desmond—and Three Vice-Heroes

In Which the Assistants Get a Touch of the Spotlight

1. THE CHASE—With strange cries, Hero Roosevelt pursues Desmond Taft and Wilson, who are rushing away with Rosamond Election. In the meantime Rosamond Election is trying to elope with Rosamond Election.
2. THE SCHEDULES—Suddenly the three heroes remember they must map out their routes for stump speaking, so, momentarily forgetting Rosamond Election, they rush into the railroad office.
3. VICE-HEROES—Here we see Hero Taft giving instruction to Vice-Hero Sherman, the unnamed vice-hero of them all. Hero Wilson is getting Vice-Hero Marshall, whose husband measures more than his collar, to take his job for a while. Bull Moose Roosevelt is channing with Vice-Bull Johnson. In the meantime Rosamond Election is trying to elope with Rosamond Election.

4. SURROUNDED—As Probs is making a speech from the old saken bucket, the three vice-heroes rush up to surround him.
5. UNDECEIVED—But the vice-heroes, after all, are no more than vice-heroes. They cannot cut without definite instructions from the boss heroes. What the instructions were will be shown here later.

The Profession of Vocational Tailoring and Difficulties as an Incentive to Success

Written for the Boston American by Dr. C. H. Parkhurst

A NEW profession has recently been opened up, which might take the name of "vocational tailoring," which has for its object to fit people out with the kind business, trade or profession that is best fitted to their individual temperament, talents and general aptitudes.

It also undertakes to correct misfits, as when a man goes to a ready-made clothing store, purchases the first article that offers, then has it worked over to a shape suited to his physical stature and proportions.

There is nothing unreasonable in the idea and there is certainly a wide field for its operation, considering the hit-or-miss way in which the majority of young people drop into their employment and their life work.

We should be funny looking people if we took no more pains to select our garments with reference to age, sex, dimensions and general contour than we do to choose our employment with a view to its adaptations to us personally.

Some people have no physical figure to speak of, and one style and shape of garment will be as becoming as another, and no style and shape becoming at all.

So there are people that appear to have no particular aptitude for any kind of service and will do one sort of work as well, or rather as poorly, as any other. But even in such case it may be that the trouble is simply that while the aptitude is there it is so concealed as to escape discovery.

It is a pleasant doctrine and rather a reasonable one that every one is particularly fitted for something. No two leaves are duplicates, no two trees, no two faces; and it lies close by to suppose that no two individuals have exactly the same quality or quantity of talents and their reach.

A short time ago there was printed the story of a young girl, blind from the time she was six years old, who graduated from school at the head of her class and carried off all the honors.

The Blind Girl Who Stood at the Head of Her Class

Class

The sting of misfortune was, to her, stimulus to endeavor.

It is related of Huber, the Swiss naturalist, that although he fell blind in early boyhood and had never seen a piece of honeycomb he yet wrote the story of the honey-bee, the habits and mystery of it and the life of the hive, in a manner of accuracy and insight that has rendered his writings classic and an authority to all students of apian science through the entire century just closed.

Instances of this kind, and there are many of them, seem to indicate that not only are difficulties not a necessary hindrance to success, but that they are fitted to be an incentive to success.

Birds mount in the face of the wind, that is, they use the wind as something to climb up upon; they convert obstacle into a means of ascent.

Of course, that applies only in case they really want to rise.

It is all the same whether it be wind or no wind to a bird or to a boy that has no ambition but to remain at ground level.

But once there is ambition, obstruction helps to its attainment, as fresh wood heaped upon the fire instead of chilling it feeds the combustion.

Conflicts with difficulties give to one a consciousness of inner faculty for coping with difficulty.

It touches the deep springs of achievement. Mountaineers have a stock of muscles unknown to those who confine themselves to sea-level. Boys who can go to school whenever they want to are not as apt to want to as those who can go only at the expense of some inconvenience.

Facilities hinder more Young Men Than Difficulties

A student who has in part to work his way through college will know more who he graduates than one who alides through on his father's remittances, or on a scholarship.

Doubtless more of our young men, wealthy young men especially, are being hindered by facilities than are being hindered by difficulties.

Facilities operate as a soporific; difficulties as a tonic. Crutches foster lameness and reconcile one to bad habits of artificial support.

THE PICNIC

By PERCY SHAW

WHEN twenty persons, more or less, laden with cake and pie and candy,

With lobsters, clams and anything that happens to be handy, start forth upon their arduous way

To feast in sheltered spot archaic, We know that picnic time has come

With indignation's ill promise.

The ladies scatter here and there— One salad stir, one slope to shatter.

One lays a cloth, one beats the tea, One heaps the doughnuts on a platter;

Like woodland martyrs sweet, they smile While perspiration rills their noses.

Though all are starved, they talk of axes And seas and pines and hills and roses.

And when at last the clams are steamed, The lobsters ready for dissection,

They argue half an hour upon Food values versus predilection.

The feast is voted grand and good, The perfect scene is strewn with clutter,

The party drops its baskets back, With thoughts too full of spice to utter.

Safe in their homes 'they sit and sigh, 'It was so warm—this is so breezy—

Why take such rafters of trouble, when 'Tis hudsons breeze is cool and easy? They vow they'll never go again.

Yet on the very next excursion You'll hear them say a picnic is

The slicest kind of diversion.
